In voting on Saturday, October 21st, Garden City voters chose to preserve the St. Paul's main building.

With 4,339 residents casting votes in the opinion poll, 2,635 chose the option that will lead to preservation of the building, while 1,704 chose demolition.

The preservation option includes scenarios of partial or full preservation of the building, including possibly retaining the front facade and building a modern structure behind it.

The vote is not legally binding on the Garden City Board of Trustees, according to Village Attorney Gary Fishberg, because the Board is not allowed to cede its legislative authority. However members of the Board have said they will use it to guide their future actions.
